Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: a flexible diaphragm does roll when used with a piston or plunger, see Douglass, col. 1, lines 45-47, thus a diaphragm would have been considered a boot. If the diaphragm 30 of Harris was injection molded (as taught by Douglass as an improvement), the addition step of turning inside out is still required to obtain the diaphragm 49 in Fig. 5 of Harris. In Harris, Fig. 3, portion 31,32 is substantially cylindrical and portion 34 is substantially a widening cone.
